The Pro Cinema 6050UB replaces the now 2.5yearold PC6040UB. Epson has refined and improved many capabilities, and upped performance, resulting in the ability to put a picture on the screen that is sometimes significantly better than the projector it is replacing, especially when viewing HDR. Did you notice the "It Is Even Better" in the title. The short answer is better than the HC5050UB, as well as better than the HC4010 and PC4050. But wait! One thing at a time. My goal, as the primary writer, is to give you the big picture, and some juicy details, without overhyping as much as a manufacturer's marketing might go.

Using these modes you can also watch 4K content with full HDR, but the HDTV standard REC709 color instead of P3, while enjoying almost double the brightness. That's a modest tradeoff for a great and brighter picture when you need it. Great placement flexibility Excellent warranty and support program Now Epson is further quality controlling key components including the 15element all glass lens. Epson is putting the best optics and other components in the Pro Cinema 6050UB. The point being, they are using enough of these lenses, that they should be able to identify sufficient quantities of superior lenses, to meet Pro Cinema 6050UB demand. Or, so I assume!. Note differences will be subtle, but they should be visible. It is also sold at "Big box" houses including Best Buy and Walmart. We'll be discussing those in a minute. Those new features essentially pushed both this Pro Cinema 6050UB and the Home Cinema 5050UB launches to 2nd quarter 2019. Bluray discs, HDTV. When that one launched in 2007, the HC1080UB, it was a game changer. The selling prices were similar back then, but those older model UBs were no match in features. The original Pro Cinema 1080UB was straight 1080p and sold for about what this Pro Cinema 6050UB will over its life. Black levels and brightness have also improved. What set that first UB apart from everything else near or below its price, was truly superior black level performance. To do better, back then, you would have had to spend way more on a JVC. Not exactly the same price. Providing value, it seems, is one of Epson's key strengths. With that in mind, there should be little surprise that Epson is by far no one close, the largest seller of projectors in North America. In the meantime, our full review of the HC5050UB will provide you most of the details you are looking for. Works for me! art Epson engineers have developed three proprietary hardware processors. One for resolution enhancement, one for HDR, and one for Image Processing.

The result Three dedicated processors working in parallel to deliver one of the best 4K HDR visual performances you could hope for from a projector, and in this case, with great handling of the darkest scenes. Speed response charts look more like square waves than the same measurements on the 5040UB or 6040UB. The PC6050UB, delivers to you deep blacks for stunning dark scenes. Check out the comparison chart. Both are excellent projectors. The PC6050 however, has a dynamic iris for superior blacks. The Pro Cinema 6050UB is no exception when it comes to delivering some really fine color. If you have been reading projector reviews, you know a lot of projectors aren't all that great, without adjustment. This extreme color performance is 50% wider than typical 1Chip Rec. 709 projectors and allows for a truly professional level of color accuracy. You can shift the lens up to 96% on the horizontal axis and up to 47% on the vertical axis. You can also set the zoom and focus, then store all the settings in one of ten presets. The lens's 2.11 zoom range provides maximum placement flexibility. Razor sharp 4K content for a 4K capable 1080p pixel shifting projector, stunning P3 color, the wow factor from HDR, and a nothing comes close feature set, that truly sets these new Epson projectors apart from the competition! That is likely true whether you have a nice darkenable home theater or cave, or, if not, instead, placing it in brighter rooms paired with an ALR light rejecting screen. And See Imagery of Panasonic Projectors Doing Incredible Things This Epson is w The first two series are designed for business and classroom applications These projectors both utilize powe It will be great to see it full of tools and crankin out new projects.
